Renting Concreting Equipment For High Rises

Construction industry in India is undergoing a major shift and the smaller towns like Ahmadabad, Hyderabad, Indore etc., are witnessing a major change in their skyline. The growth story of Indian economy is very much evident by the way the geography is changing. Till date construction of skyscrapers were taken as mega energy consumer with less regard to the underlying architecture. In today's time the buildings are actively adapting to the energy conservation and sustainability models. With the population outburst and migration of people to bigger cities have contributed to a boom in residential project sector of real estate industry. This in-turn affected the commercial sector due to employment opportunities. Both the above factors resulted in a sharp inclination on vertical urban habitat with high density of population. Around the globe, major cities are facing challenge of accommodating people with management of limited resources. The option of vertical housing seems (skyscrapers) is the only option available to the Cities.

By 2030, it is expected that 50% of population in India will be residing in cities, and with rise of skyscrapers in major metros will lead to a major impact on FSI (Floor Space Index) norms and other regulatory affairs to ease the construction procedures. Currently, there are over 200 skyscrapers projects under construction across India. Lodha's World One, the 442-m tall residential tower in Mumbai will surely change the mindset of people and set a new trend for luxurious vertical habitats.

The quality construction is always done using great planning and engineering, quality raw material, skilled manpower and manpower management, quality machines and quality finishing tools.
